

by colleagues. Have your students contact those musicians for interpretive insight.

LEARNING TOOLS

44. Realize that you will always be a student of music.

The moment any musician stops learning, his or her inspiration and motivation declines. Lifelong learners will constantly grow and improve in their own understanding of musical concepts, learning techniques and sense of self. If you are in school now, remember that you will learn as much from your friends as from your teachers. Take advantage of this time to discuss musical topics with your peers. The more we learn the more we can offer to others.

Projects:

Over the next month, schedule times when you and your friends can study together or have in-depth discussions on musical topics.

Take time to learn a skill tangential to your study. For instance, a double reed performer should learn how to make reeds or a singer can study vocal health.

